

FREE Smoke & Fire Detectors

Unfortunately, many people don't associate smoke alarms with home security. But smoke alarms are just as necessary for the protection of your home and family as traditional security systems. To help drive this point home, the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) has released a new study that demonstrates the effectiveness of smoke alarms. The study, titled "Smoke Alarms in U.S. Homes", used data from the U.S. Fire Administration to analyze residential fires over a 4 year period (2005 to 2009). It was found that the death rate of per 100 fires was twice as high in homes without a working smoke alarm than those with protection [smoke alarms]. Also statistics have found that over 30% of homes in America do not have a working smoke & fire alarm. Long story short, smoke & fire detectors play a large roll in a families home security and more importantly the safety of your family.
